WORD FORMATION PROCESSES IN “SKY SPORT” ARTICLES

ABSTRACT

Word formation is the production of new lexemes. It is defined as the investigation and description of process and rule-governed formation of new complex words on the basis of already existing linguistic resources (Bussman, 1996). From the word formation, it can create new words to interest the readers. Word formation is usually found in reading sources such as books, journal, magazines or even articles on the internet.

In this study, the researcher investigated the kinds and the most-frequently-used of word formation process in Sky Sport articles of football terminology. Then, the aims of this research are to (1) to find out the kinds of word formation in Sky Sport articles (2) to find out the most-frequently-used of word formation in Sky Sport articles on football terminology. This research used qualitative research to analyze the data. The researcher analysed the words or morphemes which related in football terminology. The researcher started the investigation by searching the data in Skysport.com, read the articles, compiling the data, classify the data of football terms which exist in articles. The data collected from 21st up to 24th September 2019 and it took seventeen articles.

The finding of this investigation that word formation processes in Sky Sport articles of football terminology were four types of word formation. Those are derivation, compound, acronym, and clipping. But from the entire analysis there is compound as the most frequently used of word formation with fourteen items from that articles. Also, there are 31 data items found from articles. There are nine derivations, fourteen compounds, six acronyms, and two clippings. Moreover, the researcher can not found all the types of word formation. From this research there are no borrowing, back formation, blending, and coinage in the football terminology during the data collected.
